Q1-

A) When the world's powerful economies exploited the global capitalist system for their own benefits, economic independence for developing countries became a far-fetched dream.

International financial Institutions provide strict conditions on loans to such an extent that rather than assistance of indebted countries toward development, they are driven more towards the crises.

This action has given birth to a new international system where the weaponization to rule is not guns but currency, interest and market. The greatest nation challenge the global nation of today is the act of balancing independence and sovereignty in such a way that it prevents their national interests from being compromised by international pressure.

B) Although the latest technologies have provided ease to human lives, ~~they have~~ it has raised new question regarding freedom of privacy and human dignity.

In this era of digital surveillance, every moment of citizens is being recorded in some form of database. Governments and corporations are transforming this vast wealth of information into a form of power that may even influence human behaviors. If this issue was not brought under effective legal and moral sphere, the future mankind may claim to be free, but this independence will merely be a deception.
