It was almost midnight, when the young scholar returned to his rooms. He had left them in a state of revolt piles of books lay like islands, in a turbulent sea. Papers fluttered on the floor, as if impatient to be read, and on the desk a single lamp burned its halo warming. A photograph of his grandmother which seemed to smile, even in such disorders who would have thought. She once peddled tales to children in the village, he wondered would she have laughed at his neat theories written now in the margins of a book.

why she don't join them for walk along the river. Sara agreed to him and said that the examination is hanging over her head and she wanted to utilize every minute for preparation. John frustrated and said that these examinations have snatched the happiness of youth, why she tolerated such pressure. Sara exclaimed to him that sincere studies are necessary not only for merely examination, but also helped in enhancing discipline and knowledge in one's life. John agreed with Sara, but the life filled with books and seriousness with fussy mind grows unproductive. Sara nodded at his stance and explained that a short-time weariness is the cost for the satisfaction which one achieved by what one has set his heart upon.
