land and ecosystems in poor regions. Electric car batteries emit more carbon during production and later add to electronic waste. Wind and solar farms

also create non-recyclable waste and still rely on fossil fuels. Thus, the idea of "zero emission" is misleading.

Humanity's obsession with green labels has turned environmentalism into marketing, not moral awareness.

True sustainability requires moderation and efficiency, not another form of exploitation disguised as progress.

Question no 3

Reading Comprehension

1- Timothy Dexter's rivals advised him to ship coal to New Castle because the city was already rich in coal. They wanted to mock him and make him lose his money. The suggestion was meant to expose his lack of business sense. Their real intention was to humiliate him by turning his venture into a public failure.

2. When Dexter's ship arrived in England, a miners' strike had suddenly stopped local coal production. This caused a shortage of coal in Newcastle, creating an unexpected demand. Dexter was able to sell his shipment at a very high price. Thus, what seemed like a foolish plan turned into a profitable success.

3. The author suggests that Dexter's success was a mix of luck and quick decision-making. Although he lacked formal education, he had confidence in business. Luck often favored his unusual choices, turning mistakes into opportunities. This shows that success sometimes depends ^{much} as ~~much~~ on timing and chance as on intelligence.

4- Dexter's repeated victories proved that success in business is not limited to the educated or conventional thinkers. He turned ridicule into profit through courage and unexpected outcomes. His achievements challenge the idea that only formal training leads to wisdom. They show that intuition and risk-taking can also produce remarkable success.

5- His rivals' reactions reveal that people often confuse unconventional behavior with foolishness. They underestimated him because he did not fit the usual image of a clever businessman. When he succeeded, their mockery turned into surprise and admiration. This suggests that "foolishness" and "genius" can sometimes be two sides of the same coin.

Urdu -> English Translation

Attempt in idiomatic and proverbial manner

05/10

Focus on grammar please

Do not attempt word by word

If a professor of Urdu claims that he thoroughly understands Ghalib's poetry and can hold an engaging discussion on its artistic merits, he is undoubtedly demonstrating his academic prowess. However, if he is asked to compose a couplet like Ghalib, he will be helpless. This is because comprehension and creation are two different realms. Comprehension is a product of intellect, whereas creation is the result of intuition and divine inspiration. The status Ghalib achieved was not merely due to study or hardwork, but was a manifestation of extraordinary genius, emotion, and divine grace.

This is why, even centuries later, his verses affect hearts

just as they did in his time.
