Rough Work

In the public imagination, renewable energy has been canonized as humanity's moral salvation - a luminous antidote to fossil fuelled past. Politicians, corporations, and environmental activists alike brandish terms like carbon neutrality and net zero as if they were sacred promises of the planetary healing. Yet beneath this glossy facade lies a disquieting paradox: the green rev itself is moving the planet into exhaustion (3) nothing more than a facade if itself is causing the planet into exhaustion (4)

Renewable energy often portrayed as a source of moral salvation and the eco-friendly terms as the sacred promises but the green revolution is a facade that itself is mining the planet into exhaustion. The production of each clean technology requires a hefty amount of Rare Earth Minerals whose extraction makes the vegetative land barren due to excessive mining and chemical spreading. The production of electrical batteries emits more carbon than the manufacturing of traditional combustion engines and they have short life-spans which make the process repetitive. The only entity benefitting is the industrial owners and the zero emission slogan has ironically become seductive but deceptive because the

Read the passage carefully to understand the central idea. Identify key points - main arguments, important facts, essential details. Remove examples, stories, quotations, repetitions, and anything unnecessary. Use your own words (do not copy long sentences from the passage). Keep it concise - usually one-third of the original length. Maintain the tone (serious, humorous, scientific, etc.). Use a suitable title (short and meaningful). Write in the third person and past tense unless the original
