

Women Empowerment

Women Empowerment means giving women equal rights, opportunities, freedom, and ability to make their own decisions of life. Women participation in education, economic growth, and in politics not only strengthen their families but also enhance the progress of whole country.

An educated woman plays a pivotal role in shaping society, nurturing her children, and fostering their skills. She can provide guidance and quality of education to her children. She can increase community development and social welfare by participating. Ideal example is Malala Yousafzai, who advocates for girl's education worldwide after surviving an attack for going to school. Organizations like UN women work globally to ensure the access of education to the girls. In economic empowerment, women can support their families by doing job independently. She knows to save money and to run her family in a right way. She can also participate in politics to make democracy

Stronger and governance becomes more inclusive. For example, Benazir Bhutto become the first prime minister of Pakistan, she was a major milestone for women's political leadership. Main focus is gender equality, where women and men have the same opportunities and value in society. In Pakistan male have higher literacy (68%) than women (52-53%) which shows gender gap is 15-16%. Reducing this gender gap and make women more strengthen fosters sustainable development and national progress.
