

NOA Precis Mock.

Q2:- Precis:-

The modern elevation of expertise has created an intellectual paradox in which increasing specialization has diminished humanity's ability to address fundamental problems. Specialists, confined to narrow disciplinary lenses, reduce human life to partial disciplinary lenses, reduce human life to partial truths, thereby obscuring its complexity. This fragmentation of knowledge prevents coherent responses to multifaceted issues such as climate change, which demands scientific, economic, political, and moral understanding simultaneously. Excessive reliance on experts has also eroded confidence in common sense, encouraging passive dependence rather than independent judgement. While specialized knowledge is necessary, it must be subordinated to a holistic understanding of human values. True intellectual renewal requires integral diverse fields of knowledge, fostering broad education, and restoring trust in ordinary human intelligence. Without such synthesis, modern civilization will remain technically proficient yet incapable of grasping the larger meaning of human existence.

Q2: Ans:

The author cites the European Renaissance, religious reform movements, and scientific revolutions to show that genuine progress has often emerged through rediscovering and reinterpreting the past rather than rejecting it.

Q3 Ans:

By the phrase, the author means that tradition is dynamic and evolving, allowing dialogue between past and present rather than being a fixed collection of outdated customs.

Q4 Ans:

Modern individuals search for meaning in new ideologies and modern movements while ignoring their own traditions, revealing a society disconnected from its historical roots and vulnerable to superficial trends.

Q5 Ans:

Yes, such distinction is possible, though difficult. While contemporary biases influence judgement, critical thinking informed by historical awareness and ethical reasoning enables societies to preserve valuable traditions and reject harmful ones responsibly.
