Sadly, contemporary literature has become commercialized and has fallen into the clutches of Mafia. A writer who sells his pen for money, actually sells his conscience as well. A true writer is one who raises his voice for truth and wields his pen against falsehood, even if he has to endure hardships, suffer humiliation or face deprivation.

However, in the present age, such courageous writers are rarely found. Most writers are seen bowing at the threshold of power and remain futilely engaged in pleasing the influential classes.

In the past thinkers had a more complete view of knowledge, but today we treat expert opinion as the only truth. We even depend on experts for simple life matters, losing trust in our own judgment while speculation is useful, it should be part of a wider understanding of life and values. Society needs people who can connect ideas from different fields and schools. That teach broad thinking, along with deep knowledge. We must also trust ordinary intelligence and common sense to make good decisions. Until then, we will remain a society of experts who know more about less and less, blind to the bigger picture.
