QUESTION NO.5 (A)

4/5

The minister, addressing the gathering, said, "My fellow citizens! we stand today at a critical juncture in our nation's history. We must ask ourselves: are we prepared to face the challenges ahead or shall we succumb to despondency and inaction?" Dr. Ahmed, the renowned economist, had warned us last year, that unless immediate reforms are undertaken, the economy will collapse. However, his advice was not heeded. Now, we find ourselves in precisely the predicament, he had predicted. Therefore, I urge you all to support the government's new economic policy, which though painful in the short term, will yield beneficial results in the long run. "Let us not," he continued, "repeat the mistakes of the past. Let's move forward with determination and courage."

QUESTION NO. 7

05/10

Attempt in idiomatic and proverbial manner
Focus on grammar please
Do not attempt word by word

Literature mirrors the moral and spiritual state of a society. When a nation's literature begins to decline, it is a warning that the nation is heading toward its downfall. Sadly, contemporary literature has been commercialized and taken hostage by power mafias. A writer who trades integrity for money ultimately betrays his own conscience.

True literature is that which raises its voice for truth and takes up the fight against falsehood, no matter how many sacrifices it demands. But in a contemporary world, these courageous writers are extinct. Too often, writers are seen bowing at the thresholds of power, using their pens to appease the mighty. This is not only a betrayal of literature but a betrayal of nation itself.

10/20

Length is ok, enhance 1-2 more sentences

Ideas are relevant

Grammar is ok

(1)

The author identifies the fundamental error as the belief that tradition and progress are inherently opposed forces, with tradition seen as regressive and progress as beneficial.

This concept is dangerous because it makes people believe that anything new is better.

As a result, society may reject useful old ideas and accept new changes without thinking about their harmful effects.

The author shows that many great changes in history were based on the past. He gives examples of European Renaissance, religious reformers and scientific revolutions, all of which used old ideas and texts. These examples prove that progress does not come from rejecting tradition but from learning from it.

(3)

The writer means that tradition is not something old and useless. It is a continuous exchange of ideas among generations. People learn from the past and improve it according to current needs. This keeps tradition alive and meaningful rather than dead and regressive.

(4)

The paradox is that modern people search for meaning in new ideas and movements while rejecting their own traditions. This shows society has lost its connection with history and traditions, making people easily influence by new trends.

(5)

I agree that this distinction is possible. Although people may have bias, careful thinking and moral judgement can help us decide about both old traditions and new changes. While contemporary perspectives shape judgement, conscious reflection can mitigate bias and allow a balanced assessment of both traditions and innovations.

In Précis writing, the use of first person pronouns like I, we, our, us is considered a blunder has weakened our ability to understand life as a whole. As knowledge becomes highly specialized, people focus on small areas and lose sight of bigger picture. This division of knowledge has made it difficult to solve complex human problems that require broad thinking rather than narrow expertise. Blind trust in experts has reduced confidence in common sense and ordinary human judgement, making people dependent and passive. The writer does not reject specialized knowledge but stresses that it should serve a wider understanding of human values and life. Society needs thinkers who can connect different fields of knowledge and educational systems that promote broad thinking. Only by restoring balance between expertise and common sense, to society can overcome this intellectual fragmentation.
