No argumentation and Analysis. No evidence

Where have you discussed that podcasts inspire people. Also how does that link to social media influencers?

Online tutors and mentors have been a great blessing to the wider audience with the passion to learn. A number of top-notch educationist started creating subject specific educational video playlists. They delivered in-depth understanding of the subject. These videos can be accessed by any person, at any time and without any fee payments. The hassle of finding a tutor, travelling through cities to reach them and paying hefty sum for fees has all been now reduced. Many mentors have launched online skills learning programs. The public gets to choose from a variety of different skill sets and master a few to enable them to earn a livelihood. This creates a chain reaction, where a person learns online skills, then earns from it and further teaches other individuals who follow the suit. Such influencers have transformed a whole generation of passionate and inquisitive minds.

There has been a surge in the fitness experts on the digital platforms. The population who has been so indulged in earning a livelihood is now getting to know the importance of healthcare, fitness and exercise through them. These experts not only impart the knowledge of healthy lifestyle but also conduct elaborate training sessions online. Their followers have continued to increase, benefiting from their services. Such followers become an inspiration themselves when they share their weight-loss journey or their exercise routines which helped them grow stronger and healthier.

It is by virtue of such healthcare enthusiasts on social media that a wider population has started taking their health seriously.

Some of the social media content creators revived the spirit of family life through their family vlogging videos. Their videos captures the little moments of family members coming together, celebrating their joyous moments, working together and sharing the struggles together. This gave people an incentive to rejoice their own families, embrace their loved ones and stick together through thick and thin. Another variant is village-life vloggers. Their vlogs introduce the urban masses to the realities and beauties of village life. They also communicate the hardships of people living in under developed areas. Such content is not only inspirational, but educational as well.

There have been increasing environmental awareness campaigns on social media. Some environmental activists resorted to online platforms to get masses' attention towards the grave matter. With the rise in climate related disasters, pollution and urbanization, the world seemed seems to be moving on the path of its own destruction. It was the dire need ~~to~~ the time to educate the wider population about environmental protection and conservation. For this many recognized influencers stepped forward to lead the environmental campaigns and invite more people to join them in the cause. These influencers thus created an air of saving the planet by stimulating the inhabitants through their social media handles.

There have been some parallel views of the critiques which label the social media influencers's reality as deception. This, to some extent, is true, as evident from promoting unrealistic beauty standards, well-crafted sets just for the cameras, and rhetorical narratives to get maximum attention. Also, to get higher viewerships, the quality of content is undermined and optics and visuals are focussed more by many content creators. Sometimes this leads to a perception where every online video seems to be a manufactured reality and a facade which is hard to identify.

How is that digital deception

Not related to the topic.

It is important to note, the social media influencers have helped a number of people to be a better version of themselves, and to sort out their lives. But with the rise in the number and diversity of such influencers, there has been a virtual competition to create more content, and get more viewership. In this race, the creators often deviate from displaying the actual truths and exaggerate the parts liked by the audience the most. Therefore, it is upon the viewer to redefine what they want to watch more of. If they admire the facade of perfection, that is what they get. But if the viewers start valuing and demanding the truthful and unaltered reality, then the social media influencers would be bound to produce such content.

The negative aspects of this digital media influence can be mitigated with an integrated approach. This demands media literacy of the masses, ethical responsibility of the content creators and government regulations to keep check on substandard data. The more people who are media literate, more will be the push back for the poor quality and false content online. The social media influencers also need to recognize their responsibility to be highly prudent about the data they share online as it is viewed by viewers from different ethnicities, demographics, ages and economic class. At last, the government needs to devise a regulative mechanism to keep a check on below average and fake material being shared on social media to mislead the public and heavy penalties should be imposed on such ~~so-called~~ influencers.
