

Q:1: Read the Passage:

Question (1)

✓

1

The author states that the memory is the archive of the human experience, but its nature is subjective as it reshapes past events.

(2)

2

Memory is described as both selective and reconstructive due to its changing nature. It is considered selective as it emphasizes some moments while forgetting other. Memory is also considered reconstructive as it reshapes past events according to the current beliefs, desires, or fears.

(3)

0

Collective memory plays an important role in how societies understand history and cultures. Although Because of its subjective nature, communities focus only on some events and disregard other events.

✗

Collective memory is forged by rituals, and oral traditions.

(4)

2

Memory has a close relation with emotion, according to the passage. Past events that are associated with intense emotions, such as fear, joy, or shame are recalled differently from mundane events of life. Perspective can lead to a subjective interpretation of events as well. Different people will remember distant details of the same event to suit their narrative.

(5)

Memory is considered inseparable from identity as the stories a ^{people} person tells about

(5)

0

Memory is considered inseparable from identity as the stories people tell about themselves inform their own identity. According to scholars studying memory, stories individuals tell about themselves are inseparable from stories they live. Thus, this reflects both past occurrences and present identity.

④ Question #2: Pair of Words

(i) Gamble:

His gambling has put our finances at risk. ✓

Gambol:

The child joyfully gambolled towards her mother. ✗

(ii) Incite:

The leader of the opposition is inciting violence against the state. ✓

5

Insight:

My father is a man of wisdom and insight. ✓

(iii) Pique:

I was very piqued by her presence at the event. ✓

Peak:

The United States military was at its peak during the invasion of Afghanistan. ✗

(iv) Loath:

I loath to make such an announcement. ✓

Loathe:

He loathed the idea that he would be commanded by a woman. ✓

Unit

(VIII) Hoard

The Mongols hoarded and pilaged the palace and

×

Horde

The Tatar horde fought the enemy by surprise.

×

Question #3: Similar Words

1: Improvising:

Resistant (B) ✓

2: Laconic:

Brief and to the point (B) ✓

3: Obsequious:

Submissive (A) ✓

4: Venerate:

Honor (B) ✓

5: Trepidation:

Anxiety (B) ✓

6: Cogent:

Persuasive (B) ✓

7: Fastidious:

Meticulous (B) ✓

8: Impetuous:

Rash (A) ✓

9: Auspicious:

Promising (B) ✓

10: Recondite:

Complex and little known (B) ✓

10

Question #4: Opposite Words

1: Inscrutable:

Transparent (B) ✓

2: Malevolent:

Benevolent (A) ✓

3: Improvising:

Penetrable (B) ✓

4: Ambivalent:

Certain (A) ✓

5: Voracious:

Moderate (C) ✓

6: Intractable:

Manageable (B) ✓

7: Tacit:

Explicit (C) ✓

8: Laconic:

Wordy (A) ✓

8

★ Q:1: Read the Passage:

Question (1):

The author states that the memory is the archive of the human experience, but its nature is subjective as it reshapes past events.

(2)

Memory is described as both selective and reconstructive due to its changing nature. It is considered selective as it emphasizes some moments while forgetting others. Memory is also considered reconstructive as it reshapes past events according to the current beliefs, desires, or fears.

(3)

Collective memory plays an important role in how societies understand history and cultures. Although because of its subjective nature, communities focus only on some events and disregard other events. Collective memory is forged by rituals and oral traditions.

(4)

Memory has a close relation with emotion, according to the passage. Past events that are associated with intense emotions, such as fear, joy, or shame are recalled differently from mundane events of life. Perspective can lead to a subjective interpretation of events as well. Different people will remember distant details of the same event to suit their narrative.

(5)

Memory is considered inseparable from identity as the stories ^{people} a person tells about

(5)

Memory is considered inseparable from identity as the stories people tell about themselves inform their own identity. According to scholars studying memory, stories individuals tell about themselves are inseparable from stories they live. Thus, this reflects both past occurrences and present identity.

★ Question #2: Pals of Words

(V) Gamble:

His gambling has put our finances at risk.

Gambol:

The child joyfully gambolled towards her mother.

(VI) Incite:

The leader of the opposition is inciting violence against the state.

Insight:

My father is a man of wisdom and insight.

(VII) Pique:

I was very piqued by her presence at the event.

Peak:

The United States military was at its peak during the invasion of Afghanistan.

(IV) Loath:

I loath to make such an announcement.
Loathe:

He loathed the idea that he would be commanded by a woman.

(VI)

(VII) Hoard

The Mongols hoarded and pilaged the palace and

Horde

The Tatar horde caught the enemy by surprise.

Question #3: Similar Words

Synonym

1. Improvise:

Resistant (B)

2. Laconic: Brief and to the point (B)

3. Obsequious: Submissive (A)

4. Venerate: Honor (B)

5. Trepidation: Anxiety (B)

6. Cogent: Persuasive (B)

7. Fastidious: Meticulous (B)

8. Impetuous: Rash (A)

9. Auspicious: Promising (B)

10. Recumbent: Complex and little known (B)

Question #4: Opposite Words

1. Inscrutable: Transparent (B)

2. Malevolent: Benevolent (A)

3. Improvise: Penetrable (B)

4. Ambivalent: Certain (A)

5. Voracious: Moderate (C)

6. Intractable: Manageable (B)

7. Tacit: Explicit (C)

8. Laconic: Wordy (A)

a Mollify: Aggravate (b)

10: Obscure: Conspicuous (b)