The Limits of Expertise

~~Write~~: The writer critically analysis that the modern human rely extremely on expert's advise. As knowledge is getting more specialized, humans are getting more dependent on experts for basic spiritual, economic and social issues. These experts despite having abundance knowledge, cannot help humans fully because of nature of their work. They only analysis humans through the lens of their discipline. Their advice need to be taken as a chunk of solution but people take it as a permanent solution. This growing specialization confuses humans to find one right expert for any problem. Institutions, Institutions take help of these experts and threat these separately. People in the past have this ability to view the world through a united lens. This ability is lost today and creates problems for humanity. Moreover, when experts gain this much fame, humans resist to rely on common sense. Experts are called upon for enlightening how to live a life from birth to death as it is a technical training rather than wisdom that requires actually living life. This put humans conscious on parse. Humans should conceive these as separate knowledge of human life rather than rejecting it.

Questions

Q1.

What fundamental error does the author identify in the popular understanding of tradition and progress, and why is this error considered dangerous?

The author identifies a fundamental error in the popular understanding of tradition and progress that these two forces are viewed as locked in eternal opposition. This error is considered a dangerous intellectual trap because this error ~~distances~~ cuts humans from history. Modern people are seeking meaning, purpose and identity which might be found in tradition.

Q2.

How does the author use historical examples to challenge the notion that progress requires abandoning the past?

The author used the historical examples to challenge the notion that progress requires abandoning the past by telling scholars of the European Renaissance to lead backward to classic antiquity.

Similarly, he used examples of religious reformers and scientific revolutions which involved ancient text and neglected insights from earlier thinkers respectively.

Q3.

What does the writer mean by describing tradition as "a living conversation" rather than "a static repository of dead customs"?

The writer means by describing tradition as "a living conversation rather than a static repository of dead customs" that the present interrogates the past and the past interrogates the present. This means past and present are connected and help thinkers to move in future.

Q4.

According to the passage, what paradox exists in the modern search for meaning and what does this reveal about contemporary society?

The modern search for meaning has a paradox that people can find meaning, purpose and identity in esoteric spiritualities, therapeutic techniques and political movements. It reveals that if contemporary society starts to seek the meaning in tradition, it might find the meaning in tradition.

Q5.

The author argues that distinguishing between valuable tradition and harmful ones requires "real intellectual and judgement." Do you agree that such distinction is possible, or are we inevitably biased by our contemporary perspective? Justify your position.

Yes, real intellectual and judgement can distinguish between valuable tradition and harmful one by understanding the thinking behind the traditions and by evaluating and by judging the overall benefits and disbenefits of traditional societies.

Literature is like a nerve ~~to~~ to any society which mirrors its moral and spiritual understanding. When literature of any society starts fading, then it is understood that the society is about to face its consequences. Unfortunately, today's literature has lost its value and is captured by Mafias. The writer who sold his pen for money, also sold his conscience. True scholar ~~is~~ is one ~~to~~ who raises his or her voice for truth and against false despite sacrificing. But in today's era, these brave writers are rare. Often scholars bow down to power and mafias are busy in making powerful groups happy by their writings. This is unfaithfulness ~~to~~ with the literature and betrayal with the nation.
