Tunnel Vision

The specialization of the knowledge has overshadowed the human's ability to solve the basic life problems. The fragmentation of knowledge into various disciplines elicits "tunnel vision". The specialists of one field perceive the reality according to their relative views. A single dimension view to life ignore the multi-dimensionality of life. The intra-disciplinary fargers give birth to inter-disciplinary comprehension deficit. It creates partiality of the views regarding the reality. The philosophers of the middle-ages enjoyed the unified picture of the reality despite their limited knowledge. At present, the distorted reality perceived by the experts of different fields, mitigates the importance of inherent human judgement. The exclusive approach towards the life, gave birth to consumerism. The idea of moderate consultation should be adopted to yield broader perspective to life. The intersectionality of various disciplines harbours the inter-disciplinary exchange of the ideas. However, experience and human instinct must be prioritized until the

Without restoring unity to knowledge, civilization will continue to know more and more about less and less while remaining blind to the larger picture

Literature being the pulse of a society depicts its moral and spiritual state. The literary bankruptcy of a nation must be conceived as its downfall.

Unfortunately, the contemporary literature has turned into a commercial one, trapped by the mafia. A writer who sells his pen for the sake of money, actually sells his conscience too. A true writer is one who raises his voice for the right and uses his pen to condemn the wrong irrespective of the sacrifices he must offer.

But such courageous writers have been extinct in this age. Many writers are tend to bow their heads before the "powerful" and waste their energies in the vain efforts of making them happy.

It is dishonesty to the literature and a treason to the nation.

Ans 1:
The fundamental error in the popular understanding of tradition and progress; is a limited perception of the both. Tradition is often mistaken as a skeleton
in the cupboard with a detestation to the innovation. While, progress is considered as a dynamic force, free from any constraint. The error in <sup>such limited</sup> understanding is dangerous
as it holds prejudice regarding
all past practices and perceives
progress as an assurance of the betterment. Thus, things must be perceived without any prejudice.

Ans 2:

The author challenges the notion of that progress requires abandoning of the past by using the historical examples. At first, the example of European scholars of renaissance has been quoted to prove that how they were inspired from the classical antiquity, which resulted in the classical creative reappropriation of the past. Secondly, religious reformers took help from the ancient holy scriptures. Lastly, scientific innovations are also owed to the ground-breaking insights of the previous scientists. Thus, progress does not require abandonment of the past.

Ans 3:

The author describes the tradition as a living conversation across the generations as it perceives the past traditions as the roots of the innovation. A Tradition is nothing but <sup>the present</sup> ~~past~~ doing interrogation with the past in which past examines the present. Thus, emancipation from the past is actually a process of being rootless and blocking the way of innovations.

Ans 4:

According to the author, people of the modern world search meaning, objective, and self-recognition through the adoption of ancient practices. These practices involved the paradox of relying on past traditions related to spiritual awakening, psychological peace, and even political movements. Several people adopt these practices despite expressing their prejudice and detestation for the past.

Thus, giving birth to the paradox of <sup>hypocritical</sup> complete relation between tradition and progress.

Ans 5:

The author's argument about the distinction between valuable <sup>and harmful</sup> traditions requiring "real intelligence and judgement" is partially true. Intelligence is subjective and so the relationship between the intelligence and personal autonomy. The "real intelligence and judgement" might differ from culture to culture. The socio-economic, psychological, and historical experiences play a crucial role in constructing one's thought process. What is considered wrong for one society, can be a reality for another society. So, to distinguish between the valuable and harmful practices, a unified approach is necessary rather than just relying on the "real intelligence and judgement".
