The minister addressing the gathering said, "My fellow citizens, we stand today at a critical juncture in our nation's history." We must ask ourselves, "Are we prepared to face the challenges ahead or shall we succumb to despondency and inaction?" Dr. Ahmed, the renowned economist, had warned us last year that unless immediate reforms are undertaken, the economy will collapse. However, his advice was not heeded. Now, we find ourselves in precisely the predicament he had predicted. Therefore, I urge you all to support the government's new economic policy, which, though painful in short-term, will yield beneficial results in the long-run. Let's not be continued repeating the mistakes of the past. Let's move forward with determination and courage.

Q1. The author identifies the fundamental error in understanding tradition and progress as misconception in the relation between tradition and progress. For him, we have been taught to view tradition and progress as unending oppositions. With tradition, he argues that past seeking is dead hand task to build innovation. Like wise, progress is breaking our past experiences to solidify the future. This error is dangerous because it leads to intellectual trap. Author brings questions asking that the discrepancies has dismantled our civilization and culture.

Author says every great renaissance has benefitted from past and its creative integration to the future. Author exemplifies the scholars of European renaissances who looked into the past, integrated it with the future. Moreover, religious reformers placed their visions on the basis of previous ancient holy texts. He further asserts that scientific revolution was grounded with historical neglected insights and discoveries.

Q: 3:

Tradition as a living conversation across generations, means that we get past-driven judgements, experiments and observation to cobble the future. Author says tradition is like the roots of a tree. When roots are preserved well then tree will go tall. Same in the way when past experiences are integrated in current times, progress is vital one.

Q:4

The paradox which exists in modern search of meaning is that people seek past as best form of their search. They are blind to find any thing that present in past could shelter the dreams of future. Paradox suggests that meaning from past should be highly enlarged to avoid any despise.

Q:5

Such distinction is possible as author describes that blind adherence to past can despise one's present and future. We are not yet biased but we need to be careful when seeking help from the past. Because believes, notions, customs and experiences learned in past might be wrong in the future. So, judgment should be very careful.
